INTRODUCTION	3
ARGUMENT	3
I. Plaintiffs Are Likely To Succeed on the Merits	3
A.Plaintiffs Are Likely to Prove That §2(B) Is Preempted by Federal Law and Violates the Fourth Amendment	3
1. Arizona Law Enforcement Agencies Will Extend Detentions Under § 2(B)	5
2. Plaintiffs Are Substantially Likely to Prevail on Their Claim That § 2(B) Is Preempted by Federal Law	8
3. Plaintiffs Are Substantially Likely to Prevail on Their Claim That § 2(B) Violates the Fourth Amendment	8
4. At a Minimum, the Court Should Certify the Question of Whether § 2(B) Authorizes Additional Detention to the Arizona Supreme Court	10
B.Plaintiffs Are Likely to Prove That § 2(B) Violates the Equal Protection Clause.	11
1. The Legislative History of S.B. 1070 Demonstrates a Discriminatory Intent.....	12
i. Legislators routinely relied on false or misleading evidence in promoting S.B. 1070, strongly suggesting that their stated reasons were pretext for unlawful discrimination.....	13
ii. Legislators repeatedly conflated Latinos, Spanish-speaking individuals, and the children of unauthorized immigrants with “illegal aliens,” thereby demonstrating that their attempts to punish and harass “illegal aliens” were also directed at these larger groups.....	17
iii. Legislators’ use of camouflaged racial language during the S.B. 1070 debate is evidence of discriminatory intent.	20
iv. Statements of legislators who opposed S.B. 1070 further support a finding of discriminatory intent.	22
v. Discriminatory statements by constituents and the public influenced the legislative process and support a finding of discriminatory intent.	23
2. S.B. 1070’s Discriminatory Adverse Impact on Latinos and Mexican Nationals Weighs in Favor of a Finding of Discriminatory Intent.....	26
3. The Historical Background and Events Leading Up to the Passage of S.B. 1070 Demonstrate Its Racial and Anti-Mexican Animus	30

1	4. S.B. 1070 Departs Substantively from Established Practice.....	34
2	C.Plaintiffs Are Substantially Likely to Prevail on Their Claim That A.R.S. § 13-2929 Is
3	Preempted by Federal Law.....	36
4	1. A.R.S. § 13-2929 Is Field Preempted	37
5	2. A.R.S. § 13-2929 Is Conflict Preempted	39
6	II. Plaintiffs Will Suffer Irreparable Harm if the Preliminary Injunction Is Not Granted
7		41
8	III. The Balance of Equities Tips Sharply In Favor of Plaintiffs	46
9	IV. The Preliminary Injunction Will Serve the Public Interest	47
10	CONCLUSION	49

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65, Plaintiffs Valle del Sol, et al. (“Plaintiffs”) hereby move for a preliminary injunction enjoining all Defendants from enforcing § 2(B) of Arizona Senate Bill 1070 (“SB 1070”), and from enforcing A.R.S. § 13-2929, as enacted by § 5 of SB 1070.

INTRODUCTION

In Arizona v. United States, the Supreme Court addressed the preemption claims that the United States brought against four sections of S.B. 1070—§§ 3, 5(C), 6, and 2(B)—in this Court. No. 11-182, ___ U.S. ___ (June 25, 2012) (slip op. available at <http://www.supremecourt.gov/opinions/11pdf/11-182b5e1.pdf>). The Supreme Court affirmed this Court’s injunction against §§ 3, 5(C), and 6. On the fourth provision—§ 2(B)—the Supreme Court found that an injunction was not appropriate based on the record before it, but explicitly preserved the possibility that § 2(B) could be enjoined in another action, and identified clear boundaries that § 2(B) may not lawfully cross.

Plaintiffs brought many of the same preemption claims as the United States, including the claims that have invalidated §§ 3, 5(C), and 6. But this action involves additional claims, evidence, and irreparable injuries beyond what the Supreme Court had before it in Arizona. In light of those claims, evidence, and injuries and the Supreme Court’s guidance in Arizona, Plaintiffs bring this Motion for Preliminary Injunction, which presents three issues:

First, Plaintiffs seek a preliminary injunction against § 2(B) of S.B. 1070 on preemption and Fourth Amendment grounds. The Supreme Court stated that if police extend detentions for status verification or other immigration purposes under § 2(B), that will “raise constitutional concerns . . . [a]nd . . . disrupt the federal framework.” Arizona, slip op. at 2. The Court declined to “assume” that § 2(B) would be implemented in such a manner based on the record before it. Id. at 24. Plaintiffs here submit additional evidence demonstrating that § 2(B) will be implemented in precisely the manner that the Supreme Court deemed unconstitutional thereby irreparably harming any individuals subject to

1 illegal detentions. Given this new evidence, Plaintiffs can establish a likelihood of success 2 or serious questions going to the merits of these claims. Therefore, § 2(B) can and should 3 be preliminarily enjoined—at least until the Arizona Supreme Court definitively interprets 4 the provision in a way that forecloses unconstitutional implementation, which it could do 5 on certification from this Court.

6 Second, Plaintiffs seek a preliminary injunction against § 2(B) of S.B. 1070 based 7 on their Equal Protection Clause claim. Plaintiffs are likely to succeed in demonstrating 8 that § 2(B) violates the Equal Protection Clause because racial or national origin 9 discrimination was a motivating factor in its enactment. Even though merits discovery has 10 been stayed in this case, there is already substantial evidence in each of the categories 11 enumerated in Village of Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development 12 Corporation, 429 U.S. 252 (1977), which is probative of discriminatory intent. And while 13 the evidence on this motion supports a finding of discriminatory intent, at this stage this 14 Court need only find a likelihood of success or serious questions going to the merits of this 15 claim.

16 Third, Plaintiffs seek a preliminary injunction against A.R.S. § 13-2929 on 17 preemption grounds. The Supreme Court’s analysis of §§ 3 and 5(C) further clarifies that 18 § 13-2929, the state harboring crime created by § 5 of S.B. 1070, is both field and conflict 19 preempted. Plaintiffs did not specifically seek a preliminary injunction against this portion 20 of § 5 in their initial motion for a preliminary injunction, and the Court has not addressed 21 field or conflict preemption challenges to this provision in either this case or in the U.S.
22 case (No. 2:10cv1413). Given the unanimous disapproval of similar harboring laws by 23 other federal courts and the Supreme Court’s recent decision, Plaintiffs are likely to 24 succeed in showing that § 13-2929 is preempted.

25 The requested injunction would protect the individual Plaintiffs and members of 26 Plaintiff organizations from irreparable harm, including the harms of unlawful detention 27 and arrest under § 2(B) and § 13-2929; prosecution under § 13-2929; and the stigma 28

1 imposed by the racial and national origin discrimination underlying § 2(B). These harms 2 to individuals and organizations were not before the Supreme Court in Arizona. The 3 public interest will likewise be served by the suspension of provisions that threaten 4 fundamental constitutional rights, disrupt the nation’s ability to speak with one voice on 5 immigration matters, and embody racial and national origin animus. Accordingly, 6 Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court grant the preliminary injunction they seek. As 7 to § 2(B), as discussed below, Plaintiffs alternatively request that the Court grant 8 Plaintiffs’ request for certification of questions concerning § 2 to the Arizona Supreme 9 Court and preliminarily enjoin § 2(B) pending the results of such certification.

10 ARGUMENT

11 Ordinarily, “[a] plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is 12 likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of 13 preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in 14 the public interest.” Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008).

15 Where “the balance of hardships tips sharply in the plaintiff’s favor,” the plaintiff need 16 only “demonstrate[] . . . that serious questions going to the merits were raised” to justify 17 an injunction. Alliance of the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1134-35 (9th Cir.
 18 2011). Plaintiffs are entitled to a preliminary injunction under either standard.

19 I. Plaintiffs Are Likely To Succeed on the Merits

20 A. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Prove That § 2(B) Is Preempted by Federal Law 21 and Violates the Fourth Amendment

22 In Arizona, although the Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit’s ruling on § 23 2(B), the Supreme Court did not hold that § 2(B) is constitutional; indeed, the Court 24 explicitly preserved the possibility that § 2(B) could be enjoined in another action.
 25 Arizona, slip op. at 24. And the Supreme Court outlined the showing that would be 26 sufficient to hold § 2(B) preempted by federal law:

27 Detaining individuals solely to verify their immigration status would raise 28

1 constitutional concerns. See, e.g., Arizona v. Johnson, 555 U.S. 323, 333 2 (2009); Illinois v. Caballes, 543 U.S. 405, 407 (2005) (“A seizure that is 3 justified solely by the interest in issuing a warning ticket to the driver can 4 become unlawful if it is prolonged beyond the time reasonably required to 5 complete that mission”). And it would disrupt the federal framework to put 6 state officers in the position of holding aliens in custody for possible 7 unlawful presence without federal direction and supervision. Cf. Part IV–C, 8 supra (concluding that Arizona may not authorize warrantless arrests on the 9 basis of removability). The program put in place by Congress does not 10 allow state or local officers to adopt this enforcement mechanism.

11 Id. at 22.

12 Thus, if § 2(B) allows detention for immigration status verification, it is preempted 13 by federal law and raises other constitutional concerns. And this Court has previously 14 found in this case that both the first and second sentences of § 2(B) would, on their face, 15 cause such detention, based on their plain language and the evidence in the record 16 regarding the length of immigration status checks. Doc #447 at 35-38.

17 Without addressing that finding, however, the Supreme Court indicated that “§ 2(B) 18 could be read to avoid these concerns,” because “state courts may conclude that, unless the 19 person continues to be suspected of some crime for which he may be detained by state 20 officers, it would not be reasonable to prolong [a] stop,” Arizona, slip op. at 22, and one 21 could also read the second sentence of § 2(B) “as an instruction to initiate a status check 22 every time someone is arrested, or in some subset of those cases, rather than as a command 23 to hold the person until the check is complete no matter the circumstances.” Id. at 23. In 24 sum, on the record before the Court, “[t]here [was] a basic uncertainty about what the law 25 means and how it can be enforced.” Id. at 24.

26 In this action, and on this record, however, there is not a “basic uncertainty” 27 regarding the implementation of § 2(B). Plaintiffs present evidence establishing that multiple law enforcement agencies in the state intend to enforce § 2(B) in a way that crosses the line the Supreme Court drew. Thus, this Court need not “assume” based on the statutory language that § 2(B) will extend stops and detentions. Instead, evidence not in the record in Arizona shows that § 2(B) will extend detentions and Plaintiffs are, accordingly, substantially likely to prevail on their claims that § 2(B) is preempted and that it violates the Fourth Amendment.

Because Plaintiffs also meet the remaining elements of the preliminary injunction standard, see infra Part II, Plaintiffs are entitled to a preliminary injunction against § 2(B). At a minimum, this Court should obtain a definitive interpretation of § 2(B) as to the detention issue by certifying relevant questions to the Arizona Supreme Court, and issue a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo pending the Arizona Supreme Court’s response.

1. Arizona Law Enforcement Agencies Will Extend Detentions Under § 2(B)

The evidence establishes that, notwithstanding the Supreme Court’s ruling, Arizona law enforcement will interpret § 2(B) as requiring them to extend stops and other detentions beyond when they would ordinarily conclude, solely for immigration-related purposes. As an initial matter, while the Supreme Court held that the language of § 2(B) could conceivably be interpreted not to require extended detentions, interpreting § 2(B) to mandate detention is the most natural reading of the statute. Indeed, that is how Arizona agencies have continued to interpret § 2(B). Nothing in the state’s newly reissued training materials on S.B. 1070 indicates that § 2(B) cannot be used to extend detentions solely for immigration purposes, nor do these materials set any limit on the length of time an individual can be held pending the results of immigration verification requests. See Br. for Pls., United States v. Arizona, No. 10-1413 (Doc. 64-5, Ex. 35) (transcript of AZ POST training video); Melissa Keaney Decl. (authenticating June 25, 2012 supplemental AZ POST training) (Ex. A). Moreover, in the short amount of time since the Supreme Court

1 ruled, multiple Arizona law enforcement officials have publicly stated that implementation
 2 of § 2(B) will in fact cause officers to detain individuals for immigration status verification 3 when they would not otherwise have been detained.¹

4 In a declaration submitted with this motion, Tucson Police Chief Roberto 5 Villaseñor explains some of the problems posed by § 2(B) in detail, including the way that 6 police operating under § 2(B) will extend detention solely for immigration purposes.
 7 Villaseñor Decl. ¶¶ 4-9 (Ex. D). In particular, Chief Villaseñor outlines two common 8 scenarios in which § 2(B) will extend detentions. Id. ¶¶ 8-10. First, the Tucson Police 9 Department currently makes approximately 36,000 “cite in lieu of detention” arrests per 10 year. Id. ¶ 8. The Chief states that “[u]nder Section 2(B) if we cannot get immediate 11 confirmation from federal officials of the immigration status of these suspects, we will 12 have to extend their detentions in the field until we get a status determination from federal 13 officials, or book them into jail to await these results. Id. Either situation will result in 14 extended detention of thousands of individuals—even if it is for brief periods of time.” Id.
 15 ¶ 9.

16 Second, Chief Villaseñor expects that “status checks under Section 2(B) will 17 operate the following way, both in my department and in other departments: once we make 18 the request mandated under Section 2(B), we will wait to hear back from federal 19 immigration officials before releasing the person.” Id. ¶ 10. That too will extend 20 detentions, especially in light of the fact that the private cause of action authorized in § 21 2(H) will put “Arizona law enforcement officers . . . under intense pressure to enforce the 22 provisions of SB 1070,” undermining the effectiveness of protections that putatively 23 safeguard constitutional rights. Id. ¶¶ 6-7.

24 Other Arizona law enforcement officials have also indicated that § 2(B) will extend

26 ¹ Indeed, both this Court, United States v. Arizona, 703 F. Supp. 2d 980, 993-98 (D. Ariz.
 27 2010), and the Ninth Circuit, United States v. Arizona, 641 F.3d 339, 346-52 (9th Cir.
 28 2011), found that to be a natural interpretation of the statute. And, even in oral argument before the Supreme Court, the state repeatedly refused to represent that § 2(B) would not extend detentions in practice. Transcript of Oral Argument at 11, 14-15, 20, Arizona v.
United States, No. 11-182, ___ U.S. ___ (June 25, 2012).

1 detentions for status verification. For example, Santa Cruz County Sheriff Antonio 2 Estrada explained that § 2(B) “may result in detention of people while citizenship is 3 clarified” and noted that some geographic regions in Arizona would be more susceptible to 4 these extended detentions. Manuel C. Coppola, Locals Mixed on Court OK of ‘Show Me
5 Your Papers’ Rule, Nogales International, June 26, 2012 (Ex. B-1); see also Brady

12 Republic, June 26, 2012 (Sergeant Tommy Thompson of the Phoenix Police Department 13 indicating that one-hour roadside stops under § 2(B) are not out of the question) (Ex. B-3).

14 Indeed, at least one Arizona law enforcement official has not only indicated that 15 stops will be prolonged, but has also indicated that he will use detentions under § 2(B) in 16 ways that conflict with federal authority. Cochise County Sheriff Larry Dever indicated 17 that his agency will extend detentions for immigration purposes even as to people that 18 “ICE or Border Patrol won’t come get”; his agency will “take them to [federal authorities], 19 dump them on their doorstep and say, you figure it out.” Sean Hannity, Arizona Law 20 Enforcement Reacts to Supreme Court Immigration Ruling, White House Response, Fox 21 News television broadcast, June 25, 2012 (Ex. B-4).

22 Finally, immediately after the Supreme Court decision, Maricopa County Sheriff 23 Joe Arpaio indicated that he will look for ways to detain people that he suspects of 24 violating immigration law: “[I]t will be interesting when we arrest someone . . . What will 25 I do with them? Dump them on the street? . . . Let them go? . . . I don’t like to do that 26 [because] that’s amnesty . . . I’m going to see what other options I have.” Neil Munro, 27 Arpaio Looking for ‘A Way Around’ Obama Admin To Enforce State [immigration] 28

1 Laws, The Daily Caller, June 27, 2012 (Ex. B-7). See also Erin Burnett, Outfront,

 3 television broadcast, June 25, 2012 (“So what do we [law enforcement] do? We dump 4 them on the streets even though they’re here illegally? . . . I have a couple ideas and I’ll 5 face that issue when it comes up.” (Ex. B-6).

6 2. Plaintiffs Are Substantially Likely to Prevail on Their Claim That § 2(B)
 7 Is Preempted by Federal Law

8 Because, as explained above, § 2(B) will allow detention solely for immigration 9 verification, Arizona explains that it “disrupt[s] the federal framework” and is not allowed 10 by “the program put in place by Congress”—in other words, it is preempted. Slip op. at 11 22. The Supreme Court’s disapproval of extended detention for verification under § 2(B)
 12 flows directly from its analysis sustaining the injunction against § 6, S.B. 1070’s 13 warrantless arrest provision. In its § 6 analysis, the Supreme Court first explained that 14 because ordinarily “it is not a crime for a removable alien to remain in the United States,” 15 “the usual predicate for an arrest is absent” if the arrest is based on “nothing more than 16 possible removability.” Id. at 15-16. Furthermore, federal law both “instructs when it is 17 appropriate to arrest an alien during the removal process” and “specifies limited 18 circumstances in which state officers may perform the functions of an immigration 19 officer.” Id. at 16-17 (citing 8 U.S.C. §§ 1357(g)(1), 1103(a)(10), 1252c, 1324(c)). In 20 authorizing arrest for having “committed a public offense that makes the person 21 removable,” § 6 does not fall within any of those authorizations and “violates the principle 22 that the removal process is entrusted to the discretion of the Federal Government.” Id. at 23 18.

24 Detention solely for the purpose of obtaining immigration status verification under 25 § 2(B) is even less justifiable than arrest under § 6 (which required at least probable cause 26 of removability) and is even more clearly preempted under the Supreme Court’s analysis.
 27 See id. at 22 (citing § 6 portion of ruling and concluding that detention under § 2(B) for status verification is barred by “[t]he program put in place by Congress”). Because, as explained above, the evidence shows that Arizona officials intend to enforce § 2(B) in a way that extends detentions solely for verification purposes, Plaintiffs are substantially likely to prevail on their preemption claim against § 2(B).
 28

3. Plaintiffs Are Substantially Likely to Prevail on Their Claim That § 2(B) Violates the Fourth Amendment

In addition to being preempted, by allowing detention for immigration status verification § 2(B) also violates the Fourth Amendment. In Arizona, the Supreme Court stated that such detention “would raise constitutional concerns,” the Supreme Court cited two Fourth Amendment cases, Arizona v. Johnson, 555 U.S. 323, 333 (2009), and Illinois v. Caballes, 543 U.S. 405, 407 (2005), and quoted Caballes’s holding that “[a] seizure that is justified solely by the interest in issuing a warning ticket to the driver can become unlawful if it is prolonged beyond the time reasonably required to complete that mission.” Arizona, slip op. at 22.

As the Court’s statement regarding “constitutional concerns” suggests, detaining individuals under § 2(B) solely for immigration status verification would violate bedrock Fourth Amendment principles. An initially lawful “seizure becomes unlawful when it is ‘more intrusive than necessary.’” Ganwich v. Knapp, 319 F.3d 1115, 1122 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 491, 504 (1983)). Accordingly, “[t]he scope of a detention must be carefully tailored to its underlying justification,” id. (internal quotation omitted), and a “detention must . . . last no longer than is necessary to effectuate the purpose of the stop.” Royer, 460 U.S. at 500 (emphasis added); accord Johnson, 555 U.S. at 333 (inquiries into matters unrelated to the legitimate justification for a stop may not “measurably extend the duration of the stop”); Caballes, 543 U.S. at 407; United States v. Sharpe, 470 U.S. 675, 686 (1985). Because “the usual predicate for an arrest is absent” where detention is “based on nothing more than possible removability,” Arizona, slip op. at 16, detaining individuals solely for immigration investigation under § 2(B) violates the

1 Fourth Amendment.

2 Moreover, Plaintiffs here present irreparable injuries to individuals and 3 organizations from Fourth Amendment violations that were not before the Supreme Court 4 in Arizona. Arizona, slip op. at 19-24 (no discussion of irreparable injury or balance of 5 hardships to individuals or organizations); See also supra II (discussing irreparable injury 6 and balance of hardship specific to Plaintiffs). In addition to establishing likelihood of 7 success, Plaintiffs have raised “serious questions” going to the merits of their Fourth 8 Amendment claims and have demonstrated that the balance of hardships tips sharply in 9 their favor. See Alliance for the Wild Rockies, 632 F.3d at 1135.

10 4. At a Minimum, the Court Should Certify the Question of Whether § 11 2(B) Authorizes Additional Detention to the Arizona Supreme Court

12 Plaintiffs are entitled to a preliminary injunction against § 2(B) of S.B. 1070
13 because law enforcement agencies will interpret the Section the same way that this Court 14 and the Ninth Circuit have previously interpreted it—i.e., as authorizing additional 15 detention for immigration verification purposes. Plaintiffs recognize, however, that the 16 Supreme Court noted that the Arizona state courts have not yet provided a “definitive 17 interpretation” of the provision, which could clearly establish that § 2(B) does not allow 18 such detention in spite of its plain language. Arizona, slip op. at 24. This Court can 19 request the definitive interpretation that the Supreme Court lacked by certifying relevant 20 questions to the Arizona Supreme Court.² See Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona,

22 ² In the event that this Court decides to certify to the Arizona Supreme Court, Plaintiffs 23 respectfully propose the following question: “Does § 2(B) of S.B. 1070 authorize law 24 enforcement officers to detain an individual, including by extending an individual’s 25 detention beyond the point he or she would otherwise be released, in order to determine or 26 verify the individual’s immigration status?” Should the Court decide to seek the guidance 27 of the Arizona Supreme Court as to § 2(B), it would also be appropriate, as a matter of 28 judicial economy, to certify a similar question as to § 2(D), namely: “Does § 2(D) of S.B.
1070 authorize law enforcement officers to detain an individual, including by extending an individual’s detention beyond the point he or she would otherwise be released, based on ‘verification’ that the individual is ‘unlawfully present’?” Plaintiffs include the question regarding § 2(D) because, while not currently enjoined, it is also challenged in this 520 U.S. 43, 76 (1997) (“Certification procedure . . . allows a federal court faced with a novel state-law question to put the question directly to the State’s highest court, reducing the delay, cutting the cost, and increasing the assurance of gaining an authoritative response.”); see also A.R.S. § 12-1861 (providing that the Arizona Supreme Court may answer questions of law certified to it by a United States District Court, where there are issues of Arizona state law that may be determinative of the cause pending with the United States District Court, and where there is no controlling precedent in the decisions of the Arizona Supreme Court and intermediate appeals courts of Arizona).

Because the statute will likely be applied in an unconstitutional manner in the absence of a definitive ruling limiting § 2(B), if the Court decides to certify, it should preliminarily enjoin § 2(B) on these grounds pending the state court’s response.

B. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Prove That § 2(B) Violates the Equal Protection Clause

Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on their equal protection challenge to SB 1070. As the Supreme Court held in Village of Arlington Heights v. Metro. Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252 (1977), a plaintiff challenging a facially race-neutral law as intentionally discriminatory is not required to prove that “the challenged action rested solely on racially discriminatory purposes.” Id. at 265. Rather, Plaintiffs need only show that unlawful discrimination was “a ‘substantial’ or ‘motivating’ factor behind enactment” of S.B. 1070. Hunter v. Underwood, 471 U.S. 222, 228 (1985). Once Plaintiffs make a showing of discriminatory intent, the burden shifts to Defendants “to demonstrate that the law would have been enacted without this factor.” Id.

Arlington Heights identified a number of factors that constitute highly relevant and admissible circumstantial evidence of discriminatory intent. 429 U.S. at 266-68. These factors include whether: (1) the legislative history, especially contemporaneous statements litigation and presents a similar question of statutory interpretation with respect to detention as that presented by § 2(B).

³ While this motion focuses on Section 2(B)’s discriminatory intent and disproportionate by members of the legislature, evidences discrimination; (2) “the historical background” or “sequence of events leading up to the challenged decision” evidences discrimination; (3) the challenged decision has a disproportionate impact on a protected group; and (4) there were substantive or procedural departures from usual decision making criteria. Id.; see also Comm. Concerning Cmty. Improvement v. City of Modesto, 583 F.3d 690, 703 (9th Cir. 2009). These factors are neither exhaustive nor mandatory, and courts consider them as a whole in determining whether discrimination was a motivating factor for enactment of the challenged law. See Arlington Heights, 429 U.S. at 268; Tsombanidis v. West Haven Fire Dep’t, 352 F.3d 565, 580 (2d Cir. 2003). It is not necessary to establish each factor to prevail on a discrimination claim. Cent. Alabama Fair Hous. Ctr. v. Magee, 835 F. Supp. 2d 1165, 1186 (M.D. Ala. 2011).

The Arlington Heights factors support a finding of intentional discrimination here. Cf. Magee, 835 F. Supp. 2d at 1197 (finding discriminatory intent motivated Alabama law resembling S.B. 1070). Discriminatory animus permeated the sequence of events leading up to the passage of S.B. 1070, informed legislators’ views of the law, and ultimately suffused the entire legislation with anti-Latino and anti-Mexican bias. Key legislators relied on invented “facts” about the costs and dangers of “illegal immigration,” conflated Latinos generally or certain U.S. citizen children with “illegal aliens,” and used thinly veiled code words that, in context, plainly reveal a discriminatory motive. In operation, § 2(B) will disproportionately affect persons of color and especially Latinos and individuals of Mexican origin, as population estimates make clear.³ And, the legislature intended § 2(B) to implement state-wide Maricopa County practices that had repeatedly resulted in ³ While this motion focuses on Section 2(B)’s discriminatory intent and disproportionate impact on Latinos and individuals of Mexican national origin, Plaintiffs maintain that § 2(B) also discriminates against other communities of color in Arizona, including its diverse Asian American population that is fast growing and currently makes up about 3.3 percent of the state’s population. U.S. Census Bureau, Arizona QuickFacts (Ex. F-6). Plaintiffs will continue to advance their equal protection claim on behalf of all communities of color as the evidence in the case develops.

1 racial profiling complaints and investigations. Moreover, Arizona's decision to enact S.B.
2 1070 substantively departed from the legislature's usual decision-making on public safety 3 issues by restricting police discretion and by enacting an unprecedented private citizen 4 cause of action against police departments regarding their allocation of enforcement 5 resources. Plaintiffs therefore seek a preliminary injunction of § 2(B) on equal protection 6 grounds.

7 1. The Legislative History of S.B. 1070 Demonstrates a Discriminatory Intent.

8 As the Supreme Court stated in Arlington Heights, "contemporary statements by 9 members of the decisionmaking body" constitute "highly relevant" circumstantial 10 evidence of discriminatory intent. 429 U.S. at 267. Thus, virtually every case considering 11 an equal protection challenge to a legislative act considers the contemporaneous 12 statements of public officials, be they in legislative debates, statements to the press, or 13 campaign materials. See Magee, 835 F. Supp. 2d at 1187 n.17 (noting that 14 "contemporaneous statements by individual decisionmakers are relevant to determining 15 whether race was a motivating factor for the decision," and, in fact, that "where the court's 16 inquiry centers on finding an improper purpose, looking into legislators' motives and 17 comments . . . is now the norm, not the exception" (collecting cases)). Plaintiffs need not 18 show discriminatory motivation by every member, or by a majority, of the decision-19 making body. See Hunter, 471 U.S. at 228. And statements made by the sponsor or 20 author of a law carry particular weight in establishing legislative intent. Brock v. Pierce 21 County, 476 U.S. 253, 263 (1986); Fed. Energy Admin. v. Algonquin SNG, Inc., 426 U.S.
22 548, 564 (1976).

23 The legislative history of S.B. 1070, and in particular the statements by its 24 cosponsors, Senator Pearce and Representative Melvin, demonstrate that racial and 25 national origin discrimination was a motivating factor for the enactment of S.B. 1070 and 26 § 2(B) specifically.

i. Legislators routinely relied on false or misleading evidence in promoting S.B. 1070, strongly suggesting that their stated reasons were pretext for unlawful discrimination.

Courts routinely consider misleading statements as evidence of invidious discrimination, as it demonstrates that the stated justifications for legislation are mere pretext. See, e.g., Doe v. Village of Mamaroneck, 462 F. Supp. 2d 520, 549, 552 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (holding that exaggerated, factually unsupported claims regarding the number and problems caused by targeted day laborers were “negative and stigmatizing,” providing “some evidence of racism”); Greater New Orleans Fair Hous. Action Ctr., 648 F. Supp. 2d 805, 814-19 (E.D. La. 2009) (evaluating the city’s proffered justifications for its actions, finding them factually unsupported, and concluding that the challenged governmental action therefore was pretextual and an invidious motive could be inferred) (“GNOFHAC II”).

Legislative supporters of SB 1070 cited false or misleading information about undocumented immigrants to justify passage of the law. In support of S.B. 1070, legislators relied on assertions about the purported criminality or the alleged costs to Arizona due to undocumented immigration. But, as explained below, those legislators lacked any factual support for those assertions and indeed, some of these legislators’ statements were based on information that had been widely discredited.⁴

During the legislative debates, Senator Pearce and others routinely cited fabricated “statistics”—particularly about the alleged criminality of undocumented immigrants—to justify the need for S.B. 1070, though they knew that the data was misleading at best, and, in several instances, outright false. Senator Pearce, for example, claimed that “Phoenix number two in the world in kidnappings . . . the home invasion, carjacking, [and] identity

⁴ Other Arizona public officials, including Governor Jan Brewer, have similarly relied on alleged “facts” in order to support their positions on immigration. See Brad Knickerbocker, Jan Brewer Corrects the Record on Headless Bodies in the Desert, Christian Science Monitor, Sept. 4, 2010 (discussing Gov. Brewer’s discredited claim that headless bodies had been found in the Arizona border) (Ex. B-28).

1 theft capital of the nation.” Test. of Sen. Pearce, Debate on S.B. 1070 in H. Military 2 Affairs and Pub. Safety Comm., Mar. 31, 2010 (Ex. C-3 at 11).⁵ The claim about 3 kidnapping had been made before, but as Senator Pearce knew,⁶ there was no factual basis 4 for it. See, e.g., McCain Says Phoenix is the Second Kidnapping Capital in the World, St.
 5 Petersburg Times, June 27, 2010 (investigating the claim in depth, and finding “no 6 evidence that it’s accurate, or even close”) (Ex. B-30). Similarly, the claims about home 7 invasions, carjackings and identity theft were factually unsupported and factually 8 unsupportable—which Senator Pearce also knew. See Phil Gordon, Op-Ed., Time to End 9 Sen. Pearce’s Reckless Misstatements, Ariz. Republic, June 27, 2009 (Ex. B-32)
 10 (responding to a Pearce op-ed, and stating: “I know how it works for you, senator. If you 11 told people the real numbers—verified by the FBI—you’d have no ‘hot-button issue’ and 12 would risk losing your political base. But Arizonans expect and trust their elected officials 13 to speak the truth.”).

14 Legislators also used false statistics about murders committed by undocumented 15 immigrants, with Senator Pearce claiming that “60 % of the homicides in Phoenix involve 16 illegal aliens,” Test. of Sen. Pearce, Debate on S.B. 1070 in H. Military Affairs and Pub.
 17 Safety Comm., Mar. 31, 2010 (Ex. C-3 at 9-10); and that “‘67 percent’ of law enforcement 18 officers killed in ‘the last few years’ have been murdered by illegal aliens.”⁷ Id. Senator 19 Huppenthal made a similar claim at the press conference to introduce S.B. 1070, stating that that undocumented immigrants “ha[ve] murdered over 50 percent of [Arizona’s] police officers.”⁸ As the senators knew, their claims were unsupported,⁹ inflammatory, and could not have been drawn from actual data because neither the Phoenix police department nor the FBI collects information on the immigration status of alleged perpetrators¹⁰—a fact Senator Pearce explicitly acknowledged. See Email from Sen. Pearce dated Oct. 23, 2009 (concluding email by stating that “NO GOVERNMENT AGENCY TRACKS CRIMES BY ILLEGALS – NOT EVEN ATTACKS ON POLICE”) (Ex. E-13).

Senator Pearce also claimed that “a congressional report out called ‘Drawing a Line in the Sand’ by Congressman King” indicated that “9,000 Americans each year [are] killed at the hands of illegal aliens. 25 a day, 12 by stabbing and shooting [and] 13 might be DUI-related crimes.” Test. of Sen. Pearce, H. Military Affairs and Pub. Safety Comm., Mar. 31, 2010 (Ex. C-3 at 5). The report Senator Pearce was apparently referencing,¹¹ however, makes no mention of any statistics even remotely resembling those cited. These statistics, moreover—which Pearce frequently cited¹²—are implausible on their face, as has been pointed out by the former deputy administrator of the Department of Justice’s Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention. Robin Lubitz, Op-Ed., Expert Questions Pearce’s Numbers, Ariz. Republic, June 26, 2009 (Ex. ¹² See, e.g., Pearce, Let’s Put an End to Illegal-Migrant Catch and Release, supra note 16 (citing the same statistics, but without attributing them to any source).

1 . Pearce’s statement that illegal aliens commit 12 murders each day by ‘stabblings and 2 shootings’ would mean that they are responsible for over one-fourth of all homicides 3 committed in the United States. This is an amazing assertion, which leads one to suspect 4 that Pearce is either making up data or relying on non-objective studies from biased 5 interest groups.”).

6 Senator Pearce also cited specious statistics regarding the number of undocumented 7 immigrant sex offenders contained in a self-published, non-peer reviewed “study” by 8 Violent Crimes Institute. Test. of Sen. Pearce, H. Military Affairs and Pub. Safety 9 Comm., Mar. 31, 2010 (Ex. C-3 at 5). See also Deborah Schurman-Kauflin, The Dark 10 Side of Illegal Immigration: Nearly One Million Sex Crimes Committed by Illegal 11 Immigrants in the United States (2006) (Ex. B-45). Here again, the implausibility of these 12 “statistics”—which have been thoroughly debunked¹³—are obvious, and justifying any 13 legislation on such grounds demonstrates pretext.

14 ii. Legislators repeatedly conflated Latinos, Spanish-speaking 15 individuals, and the children of unauthorized immigrants with 16 “illegal aliens,” thereby demonstrating that their attempts to 17 punish and harass “illegal aliens” were also directed at these 18 larger groups

19 Particularly relevant is evidence that, in discussing the need for the challenged 20 action, the legislative body conflated the protected group (such as Latinos or Mexicans or 21 U.S.-citizen children of undocumented immigrants) with the ostensible target 22 (undocumented immigrants) of the legislation. In Magee, for example, the court found it 23

24 ¹³ See, e.g., Gustavo Arellano, Heard Mentality, Phoenix New Times, vol. 32, issue 285 25 June 14, 2009 (“Schurman-Kauflin’s based her findings on a 2005 Government 26 Accountability Office survey that showed 2 percent of illegals in federal, local or state 27 prisons had committed a sex crime. She then applied that percentage to the illegal 28 immigrant population at large—voilà! Instant endemic perversity! This statistical sleight-of-hand, however, withers by employing the very stats she uses. GAO data for 2003 (the most recent year available) showed about 308,000 criminal aliens (legal as well as illegal immigrants) were in American prisons; they constitute about 3 percent of the nation’s 12 million illegal immigrants. If only 2 percent of incarcerated illegals committed a sex crime, then it’s intellectually misleading to arrive at the 240,000 figure.”) (Ex. B-37).

1 probative that one of the chief sponsors of the challenged legislation “conflated race and 2 immigration status,” and that such conflation was racial code supporting a finding of 3 discriminatory intent. 835 F. Supp. 2d at 1192; see also id. (discussing how other 4 supporters of the challenged legislation “frequently conflated illegal immigration and 5 Hispanics when discussing the ills to be remedied by [the law]”).

6 During the legislative proceedings on S.B. 1070, legislators frequently conflated 7 “Hispanic” or “Mexican” with “undocumented,” as if members of one of the former two 8 groups were necessarily members of the last. During a committee hearing, for example, 9 Senator Pearce asserted that Officer Martin had been murdered by undocumented 10 immigrants, and in an email Senator Pearce claimed that Officer Eggle had been killed by 11 undocumented immigrants. See Test. of Sen. Pearce, H. Military Affairs & Pub. Safety 12 Comm., Mar. 31, 2010 (Exs. C-3 at 4, E-14). Although there is evidence that Eggle was 13 killed by Mexicans, and Martin by a Latino, there is no basis to conclude that the 14 perpetrators were undocumented immigrants. See Huerta Decl. (Ex. G). Senator Pearce 15 made the same and other race- and national origin-based assumptions in asking his fellow 16 legislators to support SB 1070. Compare Email from Sen. Pearce dated June 30, 2009 17 (asserting that various individuals had been killed by undocumented immigrants) (Ex. E-18 14) with Huerta Decl. (explaining that there is no evidence that several of the alleged 19 perpetrators mentioned by Senator Pearce were undocumented) (Ex. G).

20 Similarly, a draft letter to be signed by Senators Pearce and Karen Johnson, decried 21 “a huge protest march by 20,000 Hispanics,” asserting without any basis other than the 22 marchers’ race that “[m]ost of the protestors are not legal citizens, legal residents, or even 23 legal visitors in our country. They are illegal. They have no right to request or demand 24 anything.” Email from Sen. Pearce dated Apr. 6, 2006 (Ex. E-15)¹⁴. Pearce repeated his 25 race-based assumption several times over the years. See, e.g., Email from Sen. Pearce

26
27 ¹⁴ See Yvonne Wingett and Susan Carrol, 20,000 in Phoenix Rally for Migrants, Ariz.
28 Republic, Mar. 25, 2006 (“Tens of thousands of Latinos marched up and down 24th Street immigrants.”) (Ex. B-38).

1 dated May 26, 2009 (emailing an article about the arrests of Hispanic gang members with 2 the subject line: “Hundreds of Hispanic gang members arrested in L.A. for targeting Black 3 people (worse, is most of these Hispanic gang members are ILLEGAL aliens) Welcome to 4 the new United States of Mexico”) (Ex. E-16); Email from Sen. Pearce dated Feb. 15, 5 2009 (asserting that “vast majority” of Hispanic protesters were “illegal aliens”) (Ex. 17); 6 Email from Sen. Pearce dated June 20, 2006 (same) (Ex. E-18). In another email, Senator 7 Pearce asserted, inter alia: “I’m a racist because . . . I don’t want to be taxed to pay for a 8 prison population comprised of mainly Hispanics, Latinos, Mexicans or whatever else you 9 wish to call them . . . I object to having to pay higher sales tax and property tax to build 10 more schools for the illegitimate children of illegal aliens. . . [I] want to deny citizenship 11 to all anchor babies born in this country pre 2006 and here after . . . I object to corporation 12 and municipalities spending billions to translate everything in Spanish.” Email from Sen.
 13 Pearce dated Dec. 14, 2006 (Ex. E-20).

14 An email from a member of Senator Karen Johnson’s staff to Senators Pearce and 15 Johnson is especially blatant in conflating race and “illegal” status: it reported that 16 “yesterday (Thursday) was the day that the landscapers come into my subdivision to cut 17 the grass and clean up the park. The crew has always been totally Hispanic. Yesterday 18 there were two men who were obviously NOT Hispanic –very white and very American 19 looking—like college kids. Hooray! It looks like the illegals are starting to depart.”
 20 Email to Sens. Pearce & Johnson dated Jul. 6, 2007 (Ex. E-20).

21 Another example of this discriminatory conflation is the repeated claim of Senator 22 Al Melvin, who co-sponsored the bill, that “education, incarceration and medication” for 23 undocumented immigrants cost Arizona taxpayers $2 billion per year, referring to “well 24 documented” information on the Federation for American Immigration Reform’s 25 (“FAIR”) website.¹⁵ See Test. of Sen. Melvin, Final Reading of S.B. 1070, Sen. Floor, 26 Apr. 19, 2010 (Ex. C-6 at 15); Test. of Sen. Melvin, S. Pub. Safety & Human Serv.

27 ¹⁵ Senator Pearce made a similar claim. See Email from Sen. Pearce to Legislators dated 28 June 30, 2009 (Ex. E-14).

Comm., Jan. 20, 2010 (Ex. C-1 at 9). But Senator Melvin did not acknowledge or explain what had been pointed out publicly by others:¹⁶ that many of the “undocumented immigrants” he blamed for costing Arizona taxpayers billions are in fact native-born United States citizens. Indeed, the costs associated with educating U.S.-citizen children constitute the majority of the total educational costs (60 percent of the total) Senator Melvin cited.¹⁷ See Jack Martin & Eric A. Ruark, Fed’n for Am. Immigration Reform, The Fiscal Burden of Illegal Immigration on United States Taxpayers 45 (2010). Moreover, Senator Melvin’s statistics also assume, without support, that a large majority of English as a Second Language (“ESL”) students “may be assumed to be children of either legal or illegal immigrants with a predominance of children of illegal aliens”—at least in part because the fact that the native language of most ESL students is Spanish.¹⁸ See Jack Martin, Fed’n for Am. Immigration Reform, Limited English Proficiency Enrollment and Rapidly Rising Costs 2 (2007); Martin & Ruark, supra, at 48.¹⁹ Thus, the alleged “cost” of illegal immigration Melvin presented was premised, in significant part, on assumptions about the immigration status of Spanish speakers, their parents, and the cost of educating U.S. citizens.

As has been the case elsewhere, “the combination of a lack of evidence [supporting legislative assertions] and an assumption of unlawfulness applied to Latinos that is not applied to other groups, especially when buttressed against evidence of the conflation of Latino and ‘illegal immigrant,’ supports an inference of discrimination.” Magee, 835 F. Supp. 2d at 1194 n.21.

¹⁷ FAIR has produced multiple reports on the alleged costs of undocumented immigrants to Arizona over the last several years. See, e.g., <http://www.fairus.org/issue/the-costs-to-local-taxpayers-for-illegal-aliens>; <http://www.fairus.org/publications/the-costs-of-illegal-immigration-to-arizonans-2004> (posting 2010 and 2004 reports). Each of these documents includes the costs associated with citizen children in costs of undocumented immigration.

¹⁹ The conflation of U.S.-born children of undocumented immigrants with undocumented immigrants themselves suggests discriminatory intent against not just undocumented immigrants, but also against a category of U.S. citizens based largely on their national origin or ethnicity.

iii. Legislators’ use of camouflaged racial language during the S.B. 1070 debate is evidence of discriminatory intent.

Comments by legislators directly expressing animus based on protected status are, of course, rare, as “officials acting in their official capacities seldom, if ever, announce on the record that they are pursuing a particular course of action because of their desire to discriminate against a racial minority.” Smith v. Town of Clarkton, 682 F.2d 1055, 1064 (4th Cir. 1982). Courts therefore examine whether public officials have “camouflaged” invidious intent by using code words from which, in context, one can infer a discriminatory purpose. See, e.g., id. at 1066 (finding that statements about “undesirables,” and concerns about personal safety due to “new” people were “camouflaged racial expressions”); GNOFHAC II, 648 F. Supp. 2d at 811 (public officials cited “influx of crime” and preserving “shared values” at public hearings, terms the court held to be “camouflaged racial expressions”); Atkins v. Robinson, 545 F. Supp. 852, 874 (E.D. Va. 1982) (finding statement that she “feared the projects ‘would degenerate to slum-like conditions, with an abundance of crime’” to be a veiled reference to race).²⁰ The Ninth Circuit, too, has noted that references to crime, “unless properly limited and factually based, can easily serve as a proxy for race or ethnicity.” United States v. Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 1122, 1138 (9th Cir. 2000).

The legislative debate on S.B. 1070 was replete with racially coded language. Senator Ron Gould, for example, spoke of the need to “protect” against “foreign invasion.”²¹ Test. of Sen. Gould, Final Reading of S.B. 1070, S. Floor Sess., Apr. 19, 2010 (Ex. C-6 at 17); see also Email from Sen. Pearce dated Jan. 17, 2006 (urging recipients to “[p]lease forward ... to all of your elected officials,” a column that asserts, among other things, that Mexico President Vicente Fox is “more dangerous to America than Saddam Hussein” because “Fox engineers the greatest invasion of another country ever seen in the 20th and 21st centuries—without firing a shot.”) (Ex. E-21); Email from Sen. Pearce dated Jan. 29, 2007 (“One look at Los Ang[e]les with its Mexican-American mayor shows you Vicente Fox’s general Varigossa [sic] commanding an American city.”) (Ex. E-8). Email from Sen. Pearce dated May 22, 2007 (email to fellow legislators, inviting them to join him “in a coalition of Legislators for ‘Legal Immigration,’” and including a “[g]ood article” that warns of “[a]n immigrant invasion of the United States from the Third World, as America’s white majority is no longer even reproducing itself”) (Ex. E-22).

Senator Huppenthal, for his part, asserted that “[w]e have seen parts of our neighborhoods nuclear bombed by the effects of illegal immigration.” Test. of Sen. Huppenthal, Final Reading of S.B. 1070, S. Floor Sess., Apr. 19, 2010 (Ex. C-6 at 11), see also Email from Sen. Pearce dated Mar. 3, 2006 (forwarding an article that argued that “Our sovereign nation is facing an overwhelming illegal alien invasion by an Hispanic ‘migrant army’ that has defied our immigration laws and sovereignty. The invasion of America now totals 20 -23 million and rising. Of that number, 90% are Hispanics who balkanize our cities and towns, and arrogantly corrupt our unifying national language while actively disrespecting our culture, society and country! All this is being accomplished while our complicit government shamelessly stands by blatantly ignoring the anarchy, by allowing Mexico’s human tsunami of illegal aliens to lawlessly overrun ²¹ Leading up to S.B. 1070’s passage, Senator Gould also routinely spoke in the media about immigration to Arizona as a “foreign invasion” or an “attack.” See, e.g., Alia Beard Rau & Ginger Rough, Ariz. Lawmakers Pass Toughest Illegal Immigration Law in U.S., Ariz. Republic, Apr. 19, 2010 (Ex. B-41).

America.”) (Ex. E-23).

Representative John Kavanagh, another sponsor of S.B. 1070, also spoke in racial code when talking about the need for the day labor provisions. Specifically, he referred to what he perceived to be the threat and discomfort of Arizona residents from seeing “strange men” “walking around” to solicit work and likened day laborers to “hookers.” Ariz. Capitol Television, Capitol Forum: Rep. Kavanagh Talks About SB 1070, June 21, 2010, available at <http://vimeo.com/12740392> (“It causes massive disruption not only to the street but to the communities. . . . Women were afraid to walk down the street. All these strange men walking around. It’s a real problem. . . . I think most people recognize that most of these people are illegal aliens. Legal residents don’t have to solicit labor on the street like hookers.”).

iv. Statements of legislators who opposed S.B. 1070 further support a finding of discriminatory intent.

Statements of legislators who opposed S.B. 1070—and the reactions of proponents—are also relevant in assessing the discriminatory intent of the legislature. See, e.g., Greater New Orleans Fair Hous. Action Ctr. v. St. Bernard Parish, 641 F. Supp. 2d 563, 570 (E.D. La. 2009) (“GNOFHAC P”) (chairperson “who voted against the ordinance, said the ordinance was racially motivated and was clearly intended to preserve the nearly all-Caucasian demographic of the parish.”). During the debate on S.B. 1070, several legislative opponents expressed strong views that S.B. 1070 would lead to racial profiling and targeting of Latinos. See Test. of Rep. Patterson, Debate on S.B. 1070 in House, Apr. 13, 2010 (“We have many families in Arizona who are legal American citizens who speak Spanish, who may not look American to some people in Arizona. This could lead to profiling and it likely will in a way that I think could be very damaging to the very relationships between the communities and law enforcement.”) (Ex. C-4 at 19); Test. of Sen. Rios, Final Reading of S.B. 1070 in the Senate, Apr. 19, 2010, (stating that the bill would “scapegoat a race of people”) (Ex. C-6 at 31); Test. of Sen. Aboud, Final Reading of S.B. 1070 in the Senate, Apr. 19, 2010 (discussing the disproportionate burden on Latinos who are likely to be targeted by S.B. 1070) (Ex. C-6 at 31-32); Test. of Sen. Lopez, Final Reading of S.B. 1070 in the Senate, Apr. 19, 2010 (stating that SB 1070 “actually legalizes racial profiling” because law enforcement officers will rely on the “color of that person’s skin and say ‘I have reasonable suspicion that this person is here illegally’”) (Ex. C-6 at 33-34); see also Roberto Miranda, Ariz. Law Unfair to Latinos, Hispanics, Daily 49er, May 2, 2010 (quoting Senator Richard Miranda as stating that S.B. 1070 “leads to a greater possibility of racial profiling. This is not just if you are Latino or Hispanic—anyone of color may be subject to racial profiling”) (Ex. B-42).

v. Discriminatory statements by constituents and the public influenced the legislative process and support a finding of discriminatory intent.

Racially charged or racially coded statements made by constituents in the media or during public hearings may also help to establish discriminatory intent, if there is evidence that those statements influenced legislators. While “[p]rivate biases may be outside the reach of the law, . . . the law cannot, directly or indirectly, give them effect. ‘Public officials sworn to uphold the Constitution may not avoid a constitutional duty by bowing to the hypothetical effects of private racial prejudice that they assume to be both widely and deeply held.’” Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 433 (1984) (citation omitted); see also City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Ctr., 473 U.S. 432, 448 (1985) (“It is plain that the electorate as a whole, whether by referendum or otherwise, could not order city action violative of the Equal Protection Clause, and the [governmental body] may not avoid the strictures of that Clause by deferring to the wishes or objections of some fraction of the body politic.”) (citation omitted). Courts therefore consider relevant evidence that the decision-making body considered and acted in response to discriminatory statements by private individuals; here, too, courts will look for racially camouflaged statements. See, e.g., Resident Advisory Bd. v. Rizzo, 564 F.2d 126, 144 (3d Cir. 1977) (inferring improper

1 racial motivation from city's "sudden shift in . . . position from passive acceptance [of a 2 low-income housing project] to active opposition, in the face of protests by demonstrators 3 manifesting racial bias"); Rivera v. Inc. Vill. of Farmingdale, 784 F. Supp. 2d 133, 147-48
4 (E.D.N.Y. 2011) (finding that plaintiffs established a prima facie case of intentional 5 discrimination in part based on citizens' comments on Internet and public meetings 6 denigrating immigrants and blaming them for increased crime).²²

8 There is ample evidence that S.B. 1070 was enacted in response to the 9 discriminatory demands of private individuals. During a public hearing on S.B. 1070, a 10 constituent who testified claimed that S.B. 1070 was necessary because Arizona was 11 suffering from an "invasion" of "illegal immigrants" and that unchecked immigration was 12 "importing a culture of corruption. It's time to stop it. Enough is enough." Test. of Rob 13 Haney, Maricopa Cty. Republican Party Chairman, Debate on S.B. 1070 in S. Pub. Safety 14 & Human Serv. Comm., Jan. 20, 2010 (Ex. C-1 at 38); see also Email from Sen. Pearce 15 dated Jan. 29, 2007 (email with subject line, "INVASION USA," rebutting the "myth" that 16 "Mexico's people love the USA, respect our language and the laws of our country" by 17 arguing "[c]orruption is a mechanism by which Mexico operates. Its people spawn more 18 corruption wherever they go because it is their only known way of life.") (Ex. E-8).

19 Arizona legislators, supporters of S.B. 1070, also received constituent emails 20 around the time of the law's consideration and passage urging them to take action to 21 reduce the growing Latino population in Arizona. Many of these emails to S.B. 1070's 22 chief sponsor, Senator Pearce, also spoke in terms of an "invasion" of "illegals" or of a 23 "Mexican invasion." See, e.g., Email to Sen. Pearce dated Mar. 16, 2011 (Ex. E-29);

27 Supp. 2d 332, 341 (N.D.N.Y. 2008) (holding that discriminatory intent may be reasonably 28 inferred from evidence that governmental decision makers "bow[ed] to public opinion" and "discriminatory animus" of their constituents); Cnty. Hous. Trust v. Dep't of Consumer & Regulatory Affairs, 257 F. Supp. 2d 208, 227 (D.D.C. 2003) (finding citizen complaints).

19 2. S.B. 1070’s Discriminatory Adverse Impact on Latinos and Mexican 20 Nationals Weighs in Favor of a Finding of Discriminatory Intent

 22 first place since people usually intend the natural consequences of their actions.” Reno v.
 23 Bossier Parish Sch. Bd., 520 U.S. 471, 487 (1997) (citing Arlington Heights, 429 U.S. at 24 266); see, e.g., Comm. Concerning Cmty. Improvement, 583 F.3d at 703-04 (relying on 25 Census data to conclude that plaintiffs presented evidence creating inference of 26 discriminatory intent); Magee, 835 F. Supp. 2d at 1188 (finding a disproportionate impact 27 of a similar anti-immigrant law in Alabama on Latinos who were over-represented in the 28

1 state's non-citizen and undocumented populations). Courts also routinely consider the 2 foreseeability that the challenged action would have a discriminatory impact in 3 determining whether the legislature acted based on a discriminatory intent. United States
4 v. City of Birmingham, 538 F. Supp. 819, 828 (E.D. Mich. 1982) ("Courts will consider 5 evidence that a decision-making body took [a] certain action[] knowing it would have a 6 discriminatory effect."), aff'd as modified, 727 F.2d 560 (6th Cir. 1984).

7 In passing S.B. 1070, legislators could foresee that enforcement of § 2(B) would 8 disproportionately harm Latinos and Mexican nationals in Arizona because both groups 9 make up a disproportionate share of the state's foreign-born population and the state's 10 undocumented population. According to the latest U.S. Census figures, approximately 11 67.5 percent of Arizona's foreign-born population is from Latin America, and 29 percent 12 of the state's total population is Latino. Preciado Decl. ¶¶ 3, 5 (Ex. F). The Department of 13 Homeland Security estimates that 59 percent of undocumented persons nationwide are 14 from Mexico. Id. ¶ 8. The Pew Hispanic Center estimates that in 2008 over 90 percent of 15 unauthorized immigrants in the state were from Mexico. Id. ¶ 10.

16 In addition, there is clear evidence that the legislature enacted § 2(B) with the 17 understanding that it would not be applied in a racially neutral way. The legislature 18 enacted S.B. 1070 in the face of testimony and evidence that § 2(B)'s standard—19 "reasonable suspicion" of unlawful presence—would lead to the profiling of Latinos and 20 those who appear Mexican. See Test. of Sen. Aboud, Final Reading of S.B. 1070 in the 21 Senate, Apr. 19, 2010 (Ex. C-6 at 31-32) (discussing the disproportionate burden on 22 Latinos who are likely to be targeted by S.B. 1070); Test. of Sen. Lopez, Final Reading of 23 S.B. 1070 in the Senate, Apr. 19, 2010 (stating that S.B. 1070 "actually legalizes racial 24 profiling" because law enforcement officers will rely on the "color of that person's skin 25 and say, 'I have reasonable suspicion that this person is here illegally'") (Ex. C-6 at 33-26 34); see also Villaseñor Decl. ¶¶ 3-7 (Ex. D) (law enforcement expert stating that § 2(B) 27 will force officers to rely on race and ethnicity and lead to accusations of racial profiling); 28

1 Gascón Decl. ¶¶ 18-20 (Doc. 235-6) (law enforcement expert stating that § 2(B) will 2 inevitably lead to lead to racial profiling); Gonzales Decl. ¶¶ 16-17 (Doc. 235-8) (same); 3 Granato Decl. ¶ 15 (Doc. 236) (same).

4 Moreover, the legislature explicitly intended § 2(B) to codify the practices of 5 Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio and to require every other law enforcement agency in 6 the state to replicate his model of immigration enforcement. At the press conference held 7 on October 21, 2009 to introduce S.B. 1070, Senator Pearce—the law’s author and 8 principal sponsor—explained, together with Sheriff Arpaio himself, that S.B. 1070 would 9 restore Arpaio’s authority to enforce civil immigration law after the Department of 10 Homeland Security revoked its § 287(g) task force agreement with MCSO. See Press 11 Release, Sen. Pearce Demands End to Sanctuary City, ‘Catch and Release’ Policies, Oct.
 12 21, 2009 (“Pearce points to the federal government and Secretary of Homeland Security 13 Janet Napolitano for trying to erode the progress made in Arizona with our tough and 14 effective laws.”) (Ex. B-12); id. (“Sheriff Joe Arpaio stated, ‘This new legislation is very 15 important given the fact that the federal government has moved to restrict my authority to 16 enforce illegal immigration laws. Their recent action in doing so makes this legislation 17 even more critical to ensure that state laws are in place so I can continue to do my job.’”);

 19 Republic, Oct. 22, 2009, at B1 (Ex. B-13). Senator Pearce also held up Sheriff Arpaio’s
 20 agency “as a model for what law enforcement should be doing.” Editorial, Resist 21 Stampede to State Mandates for Immigration Enforcement, Trib. (Mesa, Ariz.), Oct. 23, 22 2009 (Ex. B-14). Senator Pearce similarly, and repeatedly, linked S.B. 1070 with the 23 Arpaio approach to immigration enforcement in emails seeking the support of his fellow 24 legislators.²³

 26 ²³ For example, in a June 30, 2009 email asking his fellow legislators to support his 27 forthcoming legislation, Senator Pearce held up Sheriff Arpaio and the MCSO as a model, 28 personally thanking “Sheriff Joe” and asserting that Arpaio and MCSO “have a proven track record of enforcing our immigration laws and not caving in to political correctness.”

Yet as Senator Pearce and the entire Arizona legislature knew, Arpaio's actions—particularly his immigration enforcement initiatives, which S.B. 1070 was designed to preserve and expand statewide—had spawned numerous federal investigations,²⁴ lawsuits,²⁵ and countless complaints and media stories²⁶ regarding racial profiling and

Email from Sen. Pearce dated June 30, 2009 (Ex. E-14). Around the same time, Pearce sent another email that again praised the MCSO, this time to rebut the charge that his bill could lead to racial profiling. See also Email to Sen. Pearce dated July 14, 2009 (forwarding an email written or forwarded by Pearce) (Ex. E-6) (arguing that the citizen suit provision contained in what became SB 1070 § 2(H) was necessary “to hold elected officials personally accountable for their continued refusal to cooperate with federal immigration laws,” and asserting that Sheriff Arpaio would not object to that provision, “because he DOES enforce immigration laws under the 287(g)”). As a result of Senator Pearce's lobbying—which, as mentioned, explicitly invoked “Sheriff Joe” as a model—26 state representatives and 11 state senators acceded to his request to endorse S.B. 1070. See Press Release, Sen. Pearce Demands End to Sanctuary City, “Catch and Release Policies,” Oct. 21, 2009 (Ex. B-12).

B-20); Civil-Rights Panel Aims at Sheriff, Ariz. Republic, Dec. 27, 2008, at B1 (“[The Arizona Civil Rights Advisory Board] is recommending that, because of racial-profiling complaints, the Maricopa County Board of Supervisors end a contract with the federal government that allows the county Sheriff's Office to enforce immigration laws.”) (Ex. B-21).

other forms of discrimination against Latinos. Indeed, the revocation of MCSO's 287(g) task force agreement—the very development that S.B. 1070 was intended to supersede—followed the federal Department of Justice's opening of an investigation into racial profiling by MCSO and DHS's determination that “the manner in which [MCSO] conducted those sweeps was not consistent with good coordination and cooperation within the communities they were operating within.” Jeremy Duda, Immigration and Customs Enforcement: If Sheriff Arpaio Continues Sweeps, It will be Under State, Not Federal, Law, Ariz. Capitol Times, Oct. 16, 2009 (Ex. B-22). Thus, there is substantial evidence not only that S.B. 1070, and § 2(B) in particular, will have a discriminatory impact, but that it was also enacted with knowledge and intent that it would operate in a discriminatory manner.

3. The Historical Background and Events Leading Up to the Passage of S.B. 1070 Demonstrate Its Racial and Anti-Mexican Animus.

A historical background of discriminatory conduct against a protected group helps to establish discriminatory intent, “particularly if it reveals a series of official actions taken for invidious purposes.” Arlington Heights, 429 U.S. at 267; Mamaroneck, 462 F. Supp. 2d at 548 (village had been historically tolerant of day laborers until laborer population shifted from Caucasian to Latinos); Greater New Orleans Fair Hous. Action Ctr. v. Regester, 412 U.S. 755, 765-67 (1973) (holding that the “totality of circumstances,” including Texas’s long history of discrimination against African-Americans and Latinos in the political process, demonstrated that the election scheme was “used invidiously” to dilute minority voting strength); GNOFHAC II, 648 F. Supp. 2d at 809-10 (citing specific councilmembers previous introduction of ordinances that would have had or did have a racially disparate impact and that apparently were motivated, at least in part, by racial animus, as demonstrated by the pretextual justifications given for those measures). Although some of the cases cited herein brought intentional discrimination claims under the Fair Housing Act, rather than the Equal Protection Clause,

1 S.B. 1070 was one of numerous recent bills introduced in the Arizona legislature 2 that target Latinos and individuals of Mexican origin. All of these efforts have been led by 3 Senator Pearce, the chief architect and sponsor of S.B. 1070.²⁸ In 2005, the legislature 4 passed S.B. 1167, which would have made English the official language of the state and 5 “protect[ed] the rights of persons in [Arizona] who use English.”²⁹ Although vetoed by 6 then-Governor Janet Napolitano, Pearce was successful in placing the measure on the 7 ballot, where it was approved by the Arizona electorate. See Ariz. Dep’t of State, 2006

 12 Dec. 9, 2008 (“[Senator Pearce] said he believes a surge of Spanish-speaking immigrants 13 threatens to turn Arizona into a bilingual state.”) (Ex. B-23).³⁰ As courts have long 14 recognized, actions targeting Spanish can be a pretext for discrimination due to the “close 15 connection between the Spanish language and a specific ethnic community.” Farm Labor

³⁰ Proposition 103 was Arizona’s second attempt to target Spanish speakers. In 1988, the voters passed Proposition 106, a constitutional amendment establishing English as the official state language and requiring state employees to use English only in their jobs. In 1998, the Arizona Supreme Court struck down Proposition 106 as violative of the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. See Ruiz v.

discrimination.”). Moreover, there is direct evidence that the Arizona legislature generally, and Senator Pearce specifically, targeted the use of Spanish as a surrogate for race and national origin. See Email from Sen. Pearce dated Jan. 29, 2007 (rebutting the “myth” that “Mexico’s people . . . respect our language” and comparing the importation of Spanish speakers to “importing leper colonies and hop[ing] we don’t catch leprosy”) (Ex. E-8); cf. Email from Sen. Pearce dated Apr. 24, 2006 (sharing an article that asserts part of “destroy[ing] America” are celebrating bilingualism, with the aim of turning the United States into “an ‘Hispanic Quebec’”) (Ex. In 2010, during the same session in which S.B. 1070 was passed, the Arizona legislature passed HB 2281, a bill that financially penalizes primary and secondary schools if they provide “any courses or classes that ‘promote resentment toward a race or class of people,’ ‘are designed primarily for pupils of a particular ethnic group,’ or ‘advocate ethnic solidarity instead of the treatment of pupils as individuals.’”³¹ Although worded neutrally, the so-called “ethnic studies ban” was aimed at one course: the Mexican-American Studies program of the Tucson Unified School District. See Nicole Santa Cruz, Arizona Ethnic Studies Ban OKd as Law, L.A. B-28). State Superintendent John Huppenthal—who served as a state senator until the beginning of 2011 and voted for HB 2281’s passage—admitted that the law’s target was the Mexican American studies program in Tucson, and further admitted that this program is the only one to have been investigated for violation of HB 2281 by his department during his term as Superintendent. 1 As Senator Pearce explained in an email responding to a constituent complaint 2 about the then-pending measure, the “ethnic studies ban” was necessary to prevent “tax 3 dollars . . . being used to teach hateful anti American rhetoric in our American publicly 4 funded schools.” Email from Sen. Pearce dated Dec. 21, 2008 (Ex. E-10). Senator Pearce
 5 enclosed in his email an overtly jingoistic article warning that Mexican American studies 6 programs are a slippery slope toward the realization of Atzlán—i.e., the retaking (or 7 “Reconquista”) of the American Southwest by Hispanics, particularly Mexicans. Id.
 8 (“[T]he Mexican government has embraced the concept of ‘demographic warfare,’ a 9 reconquering of the southwestern United States through unchecked illegal immigration 10 and by exporting its ‘surplus poverty’ to regain control.”). The anti-Latino and anti-11 Mexican animus animating HB 2281 is deep and self-evident.

12 Arizona’s anti-Mexican and anti-Latino animus is not new; the state, unfortunately, 13 has a long history of such discrimination. See Mary Romero & Marwah Serag, Violation 14 of Latino Civil Rights Resulting from INS and Local Police’s Use of Race, Culture and 15 Class Profiling: the Case of the Chandler Roundup in Arizona, 52 Clev. St. L. Rev. 75 16 (2004). Indeed, this history of discrimination against Latinos in Arizona has been 17 established in recent federal court litigation. See Gonzalez v. Arizona, 677 F.3d 383 (9th 18 Cir. 2012) (en banc) (noting that the district court found, in the context of a claim under 19 Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, “that Latinos had suffered a history of discrimination 20 in Arizona that hindered their ability to participate in the political process fully, that there 21 were socioeconomic disparities between Latinos and whites in Arizona, and 22 that Arizona continues to have some degree of racially polarized voting.”).³² This history

23
 24 ³² As Judge Pegerson notes, this history includes: “de jure discrimination against Latinos 25 in Arizona [that] existed during most of the twentieth century. Just prior to 1910, Arizona 26 voters passed a literacy law that explicitly targeted Mexicans and disqualified non-English 27 speakers from voting in state elections. As late as the 1960s, these literacy requirements 28 were a precondition for voting in Arizona. After Arizona attained statehood in 1912, the new state government engaged in an anti-immigrant campaign characterized by a series of proposals aimed at restricting the political rights of Mexican immigrants' and limiting their right to work. The new Arizona constitution restricted non-citizens from working on public projects. In 1914, the Arizona legislature enacted the “eighty percent law,” which stated that eighty percent of the employees in businesses that had five or more employees is also relevant to the Arlington Heights analysis. See White, 412 U.S. at 765-69 (holding that the “totality of circumstances,” including Texas’s long history of discrimination against African-Americans and Latinos in the political process, demonstrated that the election scheme was “used invidiously” to dilute minority voting strength); Hunter, 471 U.S. at 229 (considering evidence that “the Alabama Constitutional Convention of 1901 was part of a movement that swept the post-Reconstruction South to disenfranchise blacks”). It is especially relevant here because Senator Pearce, in advocating for his anti-immigrant measures, has explicitly invoked that history of discrimination, for example, by calling for a reinstatement of the controversial “Operation Wetback” program, which targeted Mexicans for deportation. *See Sarah Lynch, Pearce Calls for Deportations: Mesa Policymaker Advocates ‘50s Policy for Dealing with Illegals, Mesa Trib., Sept. 29, 2006 (Ex. B-27).*³³

4. S.B. 1070 Departs Substantively from Established Practice.

Under Arlington Heights, the Court should consider whether S.B. 1070 constituted a substantial departure from established practice; such departures are evidence of discriminatory intent. “Substantive departures exist when ‘factors usually considered important by the decision-maker strongly favor a decision contrary to the one reached.’” Magee, 835 F. Supp. 2d at 1186 (quoting Arlington Heights, 429 U.S. at 267). Evidence that a decision-making body’s challenged conduct does not further its own interests supports a finding of discriminatory intent. GNOFHAC I, 641 F. Supp. 2d at 574.

Section 2(B) radically departs from the legislature’s usual deference to law enforcement—removing discretion from officers in the field by requiring them to investigate immigration status rather than focusing on criminal violations that threaten public safety. Section 2(B) is unprecedented. No previous statute has required law had to be “native-born citizens of the United States.” Gonzalez v. Arizona, 677 F.3d 383 (9th Cir. 2012) (Pregerson, J. concurring and dissenting in part).

³³ Constituent emails to Arizona government officials have also suggested a new “Operation Wetback.” See, e.g., Email to Gov. Brewer & Sen. Pearce dated Apr. 21, 2010 (Ex. E-11); Email to Sen. Pearce dated Jul. 9, 2007 (Ex. E-12).

1 enforcement officers to consider any particular fact or status about individuals whom they 2 stop or detain in the regular course of their duties. Villaseñor Decl. ¶ 6 (Ex. D). Doing so 3 conflicts with Arizona's general policy of providing law enforcement an appropriate 4 measure of discretion in investigating and enforcing Arizona's laws. Id. Indeed, not only 5 does S.B. 1070 limit law enforcement's discretion generally, it redirects their efforts away 6 from areas that the legislature generally prioritizes for law enforcement: investigating and 7 dealing with crimes under Arizona law, particularly those that threaten public safety. Id. ¶ 8 2. See also Villaseñor Decl. ¶¶ 2, 5-6, Ex. 9 to Plf's Mot. for Prelim. Inj., United States v.
9 Arizona, No. CV10-1413-PHX-SRB (D. Az. July 6, 2010); Jack Harris Decl. ¶¶ 2, 5, Ex.
10 10 to Plf's Mot. for Prelim. Inj., Arizona (D. Az. July 6, 2010); Tony Estrada Decl. ¶ 5, 11 Ex. 8 to Plf's Mot. for Prelim. Inj., Arizona, (D. Az. July 6, 2010).

12 Moreover, the Arizona legislature took the additional radical step of authorizing the 13 state's residents to enforce S.B. 1070 through civil lawsuits. S.B. 1070 § 2(H). To 14 Plaintiffs' knowledge, there is no comparable cause of action against law enforcement 15 officials for failing to enforce a state-law provision in any other Arizona statute, and this 16 provision will further impinge on law enforcement's ability to apply their own 17 professional judgment to situations they encounter in the field. Indeed, law enforcement 18 officers have reacted particularly strongly to this provision, expressing significant 19 concerns about the potential for lawsuits and the nearly impossible task of defending 20 against assertions that their officers acted improperly in not finding requisite "reasonable 21 suspicion" to trigger the immigration status check required by § 2(B). Villaseñor Decl. ¶¶ 22 4,5,7 (Ex. D); see also Tim Gaynor, Arizona Police See "Difficulties" Enforcing 23 Immigration Law, Reuters, Jun. 26, 2012 ("[P]olice chiefs in Arizona are concerned that 24 requiring officers to make a 'reasonable' attempt to determine a suspect's status could lead 25 to potentially ruinous litigation from both supporters and opponents of the law.") (Ex. B-26 43).

27 Relatedly, the potential fines that could result from such litigation threaten law enforcement agencies' ability to control their own purses. A representative and lobbyist for the Arizona Association of Police Chiefs has stressed that "the fallout from such a fine could be financially devastating for smaller municipalities." See, e.g., Mike Sakal, Police Unions: Immigration Bill Taxes Officers, Tribune (Mesa, Ariz.), Apr. 18, 2010 ("[S.B. 1070] also allows people to file lawsuits against police agencies they believe are lax in enforcing their immigration obligations to the fullest extent permitted by federal law. Municipalities also could be fined between $1,000 to $5,000 per day") (Ex. B-44); Villaseñor Decl., filed July 6, 2010, ¶ 8 (noting that because the clock on SB 1070's $5,000 per day fee begins upon a lawsuit's filing, and because in Arizona, a lawsuit may be served up to 120 days after filing, a city could incur $600,000 in fines before even being served).
28

As discussed above, the evidence on this motion establishes that racial and national origin discrimination was a "substantial" or "motivating" factor behind the enactment of the S.B.1070, and § 2(B) in particular, and it is likely that Plaintiffs will be able to prevail on this claim at trial, after merits discovery. Of course, the Court can also issue a preliminary injunction based on equal protection if it finds Plaintiffs have raised "serious questions going to the merits," and have demonstrated that a balance of hardships tips sharply in their favor. See Alliance for the Wild Rockies, 632 F.3d at 1135 (citation omitted). Under either standard, a preliminary injunction of § 2(B) on equal protection grounds is warranted.

C. Plaintiffs Are Substantially Likely to Prevail on Their Claim That A.R.S. § 13-2929 Is Preempted by Federal Law

In Arizona, the Supreme Court struck down both state criminal provisions of S.B. 1070 that were before the Court: the § 3 state registration crime and the § 5(C) state crime penalizing unauthorized work. Slip op. at 11, 15. Plaintiffs address here another provision of § 5, A.R.S. § 13-2929, that likewise creates a new state crime based on alleged violations of federal immigration law—specifically 8 U.S.C. § 1324, the federal harboring statute. Although this Court previously declined to enjoin A.R.S. § 13-2929 in the federal government’s case, the federal government’s challenge was based only on the dormant commerce clause and the claim that § 13-2929 amounts to a regulation of immigration.³⁴ Moreover, at the time that it ruled on the federal motion, the Court did not have the benefit of the Supreme Court’s subsequent elucidation of the relevant preemption doctrine when it decided the motion.

Plaintiffs now respectfully request that the Court preliminarily enjoin § 13-2929 on the grounds of field and conflict preemption. The Supreme Court’s ruling in Arizona and other precedents make it clear that § 13-2929 is invalid on these grounds.³⁵ Indeed, after the Court dismissed the United States’ challenge to § 13-2929 on other grounds, but before the Arizona decision, three separate federal district courts have preliminarily enjoined similar state transporting and harboring laws on the bases of conflict and/or field preemption. Georgia Latino Alliance for Human Rights v. Deal, 793 F. Supp. 2d 1317, 1336 (N.D. Ga. 2011 (hereinafter, “GLAHR”), appeal pending, No. 11-13044-FF (11th Cir.); United States v. Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d 1282, 1336 (N.D. Ala. 2011), appeal pending, Nos. 11-14532, 11-14674 (11th Cir.); United States v. South Carolina, Nos. 2:11-cv-2958, 2:11-cv-2779, 2011 WL 6973241, at *22 (D.S.C. Dec. 22, 2011), appeal pending, No. 12-1096 (4th Cir.).

The Court should enjoin A.R.S. § 13-2929 because—like § 3—it intrudes in a field that the federal government has fully occupied, and because—like § 5(c)—it conflicts with the purposes and objectives of the relevant federal law, criminalizes more conduct ³⁴ See United States v. Arizona, 703 F. Supp. 2d 980, 1002-04 (D. Ariz. 2010) (finding United States was unlikely to succeed in arguing that § 13-2929 was an impermissible regulation of immigration or that it violated the dormant commerce clause). The preemption challenges that Plaintiffs present here are fundamentally distinct from the government’s challenge. Plaintiffs raise separate preemption challenges—that A.R.S. § 13-2929 impermissibly legislates in a field that has been fully occupied by Congress, and that it conflicts with the federal statutes concerning transporting and harboring. Opp. to Mot. to Dismiss at 19-21 (Doc. 314).

³⁵ The legality of A.R.S. § 13-2929 was not before the Supreme Court in Arizona.

1 than its federal counterpart, and imposes additional penalties beyond those approved by 2 the federal scheme.

3 I. A.R.S. § 13-2929 Is Field Preempted

4 The Supreme Court struck down § 3 of S.B. 1070 because federal law occupies the 5 alien registration field. Arizona, slip op. at 9-11. Similarly, Congress has occupied the 6 alien harboring field by enacting 8 U.S.C. § 1324, which is an integral part of Congress's 7 comprehensive immigration law. GLAHR v. Deal, 793 F. Supp. 2d 1317, 1336 (N.D. Ga.
8 2011) (finding that a similar provision under Georgia's law "imposes additional criminal 9 laws on top of a comprehensive federal scheme"); South Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at 10 *13 (8 U.S.C. § 1324 is part of federal scheme "so pervasive that it left no room in this 11 area for the state to supplement it.").

12 Congress has enacted "a uniform, comprehensive scheme of sanctions," both "for 13 those who unlawfully enter the United States" and "for third parties who aid the entry and 14 stay of those who unlawfully enter." Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1330-31 (citing and 15 summarizing 8 U.S.C. §§ 1323, 1324, and 1327). These provisions prohibit the knowing 16 attempt to bring a person into the United States "at a place other than a designated port of 17 entry or place other than as designated by the [Secretary of Homeland Security]," 8 U.S.C.
18 § 1324(a)(1)(A)(i), and impose criminal penalties on anyone who, "knowing or in reckless 19 disregard of the fact" that a person has unlawfully entered or remained in the United 20 States, attempts to "transport or move" the person within the United States "in furtherance 21 of such violation of law." 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(1)(A)(ii).

22 The provisions of 8 U.S.C. § 1324 have broad preemptive effect. See South

24 Branch, 701 F. Supp. 2d 835, 858-59 (N.D. Tex. 2010) (holding that § 1324 preempts city 25 ordinance forbidding rental of housing to unauthorized immigrants), aff'd, 675 F.3d 802
26 (5th Cir. 2012); Garrett v. City of Escondido, 465 F. Supp. 2d 1043, 1056 (S.D. Cal. 2006)

28

1 The Supreme Court recognized that Congress authorized state and local 2 involvement in immigration enforcement only in specific, limited circumstances, including 3 through 8 U.S.C. § 1324(c), which provides “authority to arrest” for violations of the 4 federal harboring statute. Arizona, slip op. at 17 (emphasis added). The Court made clear, 5 however, that states may not exceed such specific authorizations. Id. at 19; see also 6 Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1333-34 (noting that in this area there is no savings clause 7 that might authorize state activity such as the one at issue in Chamber of Commerce of 8 U.S. v. Whiting, 563 U.S. ___, 131 S. Ct. 1968 (2011)). In A.R.S. § 13-2929 Arizona goes 9 well beyond what Congress authorized with respect to harboring—arrest for the federal 10 crime—by creating its own state criminal scheme.

11 Arizona explains that a state law allowing states to prosecute and punish alleged 12 federal immigration violations fundamentally conflicts with Congress’s reservation of 13 “broad discretion” over immigration enforcement to federal officials. Slip op. at 4-5. As 14 with alien registration, in the area of the inducement, transportation, and harboring of 15 noncitizens, the “federal statutory directives provide a full set of standards” that were 16 “designed as a ‘harmonious whole.’” Id. at 10 (quoting Hines, 312 U.S. at 72). And as in 17 the registration field, “[p]ermitting the State to impose its own penalties for the federal 18 offenses here would conflict with the careful framework Congress adopted.” Id. at 11.
 19 “[T]he State would have the power to bring criminal charges against individuals for 20 violating a federal law even in circumstances where federal officials in charge of the 21 comprehensive scheme determine that prosecution would frustrate federal policies.” Id.

22 For these reasons, even if A.R.S. § 13-2929 were identical to the federal harboring 23 law, which it is not, it would be field preempted.

24 a. A.R.S. § 13-2929 Is Conflict Preempted

25 Within the past year, three federal courts have enjoined state harboring, inducing, 26 and transporting statutes similar to § 13-2929 on conflict preemption grounds. Alabama, 27 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1334-36; South Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at *13; GLAHR, 793 F.
 28

1 Supp. 2d at 1335-36. A.R.S. § 13-2929 is similarly conflict preempted. Specifically, 2 A.R.S. § 13-2929 undermines the congressional scheme by adding additional penalties to 3 existing federal crimes; relocating decision-making regarding the interpretation and 4 prosecution of these crimes from the federal government to the state without ensuring 5 uniformity; and criminalizing conduct the federal government chose not to sanction.

6 Arizona's harboring provisions are enforced by state police and prosecutors and 7 interpreted by state judges, not by their federal counterparts, and decisions about when to 8 charge a person or what penalty to seek are no longer under federal control. A.R.S. § 13-9 2929 permits the state to prosecute and impose additional penalties on individuals whom 10 the federal government has elected not to charge, or those who have already been federally 11 charged and sentenced by a federal court. Thus, A.R.S. § 13-2929 authorizes state officers 12 to "use an iron fist where the President has consistently chosen kid gloves." Am. Ins.
13 Ass'n v. Garamendi, 539 U.S. 396, 427 (2003). The Supremacy Clause of the Constitution 14 does not permit states to make that decision. See Arizona, slip op. at 11 ("Permitting the 15 State to impose its own penalties for the federal offenses here would conflict with the 16 careful framework Congress adopted"). Such state regulation would "disrupt this 17 comprehensive federally controlled immigration enforcement scheme by placing state 18 prosecutors in control of enforcement efforts under [the South Carolina provisions] and 19 permitting state judges to interpret the harboring and transporting statutes." South 20 Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at *12.

21 Of particular relevance here, in Arizona the Supreme Court rejected as 22 "unpersuasive on its own terms" the argument that a "provision [that] has the same aim as 23 federal law and adopts its substantive standards" must survive preemption. Slip op. at 10-24 11; see also id. at 15 ("Although § 5(C) attempts to achieve one of the same goals as 25 federal law . . . it involves a conflict in the method of enforcement"); see also Crosby v.
26 Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363, 379 (2000) (even if a state law shares the 27 same goals as the federal law, "[t]he fact of a common end hardly neutralizes conflicting 28

1 means”). Under A.R.S. § 13-2929, Arizona may decide to charge an individual over 2 whom the federal government has exercised its discretion not to prosecute. Likewise, 3 Arizona prosecutors may pile additional penalties on top of a federal sentence under 8 4 U.S.C. § 1324, effectively increasing the penalty carefully calibrated by Congress and the 5 federal justice system. “[T]his state framework of sanctions creates a conflict with the 6 plan Congress put in place.” Arizona, slip op. at 11 (citing Wisc. Dept. of Indus., Labor &
7 Human Relations v. Gould Inc., 475 U.S. 282, 286 (1986), for the proposition that 8 “conflict is imminent whenever two separate remedies are brought to bear on the same 9 activity” (internal quotation marks omitted)). By imposing different and additional 10 penalties, A.R.S. § 13-2929 impermissibly “undermines the congressional calibration of 11 force.” Crosby, 530 U.S. at 380.

12 In addition, Arizona emphasizes that a small inconsistency between federal and 13 state laws relating to immigration creates additional conflicts. Slip op. at 11 (SB 1070 § 3 14 conflicts because it creates “an inconsistency between [state] and federal law with respect 15 to penalties” by ruling out probation and pardon). A.R.S. § 13-2929 presents an even 16 more severe conflict than the Arizona criminal provisions considered by the Supreme 17 Court because, in addition to potentially imposing different penalties, it prohibits a 18 different (and broader) range of conduct than the federal harboring law. A.R.S. § 13-2929 19 punishes encouraging or inducing undocumented individuals to come to, enter, or reside in 20 the state of Arizona whether or not individuals enter Arizona from another state or another 21 country. The federal statute, in contrast, does not criminalize actions with respect to 22 entering Arizona from another state. See GLAHR, 793 F. Supp. 2d at 1334 (noting 23 Georgia’s provision was not identical to federal law because the state law prohibited 24 “knowingly inducing, enticing, or assisting illegal aliens to enter Georgia” whereas 25 “[o]nce in the United States, it is not a federal crime to induce an illegal alien to enter 26 Georgia from another state”); Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1334 (same).

27 Additionally, federal criminal harboring sanctions are not directed at unlawfully 28

1 present individuals themselves or at incidental or innocent contact, while A.R.S. § 13-2929
 2 permits Arizona to target such persons and behavior for prosecution and imprisonment.³⁶ 3 Congress chose not to penalize unauthorized immigrants' presence or movement within 4 the country or across state lines unless other factors are present, and the federal 5 immigration laws do not penalize transportation of these individuals in such situations.
 6 See Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1334 (noting that "the corresponding federal provision in 7 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(1)(A)(ii) . . . does not extend to the smuggled or transported alien."); 8 South Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at *15 (finding that state law making it a crime for 9 "an unlawfully present person to allow himself or herself to be 'transported or moved' 10 within the state or to be harbored or sheltered to avoid apprehension or detection" was 11 preempted in part because "[t]here is no comparable federal statute, and it appears that this 12 provision is unique in American law."). Thus, A.R.S. § 13-2929 is broader than its federal 13 counterpart because it criminalizes more activity than the federal statute intended, in clear 14 conflict with federal objectives.

15 While in one sense the Arizona statute is narrower than its federal counterpart 16 because prosecution requires that the person must already be in violation of a separate 17 criminal offense, see U.S. v. Arizona, 703 F. Supp. 2d at 1002 n.18, that alone does not 18 cure A.R.S. § 13-2929's fundamental conflict preemption problem. As this Court has 19 recognized, the relevant predicate offense can be something as mundane as a traffic 20 violation or a violation of the federal harboring and transporting statute, 8 U.S.C. § 1324, 21 itself. Order, May 29, 2012 (Doc. 682) (noting tha "[w]hile it is not clear what type of 22 criminal violation will trigger [A.R.S. § 13-2929] it is possible that traffic violations or the 23 violation of the federal alien smuggling statute could be sufficient to give rise to a 24 violation of § 13-2929"); see also GLAHR, 793 F. Supp. 2d at 1333 n.12 (finding 25

26 ³⁶ Arizona could prosecute undocumented persons for "being harbored" by reading A.R.S.
 27 § 13-2929 together with A.R.S. § 13-1003 (conspiracy), in much the same way that it 28 already prosecutes undocumented persons for "being smuggled" by reading A.R.S. § 13-2319 (smuggling) together with § 13-1003.

Georgia’s transporting and harboring law preempted in part because a violation of the federal statute could be the predicate offense).

Arizona’s statute presents yet another conflict with federal law by failing to exempt certain individuals from prosecution, making its reach wider than that of its federal counterpart. 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(1)(C) exempts from prosecution ministers or missionaries of religious denominations, while A.R.S. § 13-2929 provides no such exemption and would allow prosecution of such individuals. See A.R.S. § 13-2929(E) (exempting only child protective services personnel and first responders acting in their official capacity). This inconsistency also supports a finding of conflict preemption. See South Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at *13 (“the inconsistent safe harbor provisions of state and federal law result in conflict preemption.”); Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1331 (finding harboring and transporting state statute preempted because it “actually prohibits conduct allowed under federal law and criminalizes conduct that is lawful under federal law.”); Geier v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 529 U.S. 861, 899 (2000) (recognizing that “a federal statute implicitly overrides state law . . . when state law is in actual conflict with federal law.”) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Like Georgia, Alabama, and South Carolina’s enjoined counterparts, A.R.S. § 13-2929 is preempted because, although it is “superficially similar to [the relevant federal statute, 8 U.S.C.] § 1324, state prosecutorial discretion and judicial interpretation will undermine federal authority to ‘establish immigration enforcement priorities and strategies’” and undermine federal purposes and objectives. GLAHR, 793 F. Supp. 2d at 1335 (quoting U.S. v. Arizona, 641 F.3d 339, 352 (9th Cir. 2011); Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1335-36; South Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at *21. For all of these reasons, Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on their claim that A.R.S. § 13-2929 conflicts with federal law and is preempted.

II. Plaintiffs Will Suffer Irreparable Harm if the Preliminary Injunction Is Not Granted

1 Plaintiffs and putative class members will suffer irreparable harm if an injunction is not 2 granted. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20 (injunction appropriate where irreparable harm “likely”).
3 The alleged deprivation of their constitutional rights are alone sufficient to establish 4 irreparable injury from § 2(B) and A.R.S. § 13-2929. 11A Charles A. Wright et al., 5 Federal Practice & Procedure § 2948.1 (2d ed. 1995) (“When an alleged deprivation of a 6 constitutional right is involved, most courts hold that no further showing of irreparable 7 injury is necessary.”); see also Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 472 (2d Cir. 1996) (“[I]t is 8 the alleged violation of a constitutional right that triggers a finding of irreparable harm.”) 9 (granting preliminary injunction for plaintiff alleging Eighth Amendment claims against 10 prison officials); Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, 797 F. Supp. 2d 1005, 1019 (C.D. Cal.
11 2011) (“The Ninth Circuit has held that ‘an alleged constitutional infringement will often 12 alone constitute irreparable harm.’”) (finding irreparable harm based on likelihood of 13 establishing violations of Fourth Amendment and Fourteenth Amendment due process 14 rights) (citations omitted). In addition, courts have repeatedly recognized that the 15 enforcement of a preempted law may constitute irreparable harm, particularly where, as 16 here, more than monetary interests are at stake. See, e.g., United States v. Arizona, 641 17 F.3d at 366; GLAHR, 793 F. Supp. 2d at 1340; South Carolina, 2011 WL 6973241, at 18 *21; Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1336; see also Morales v. Trans World Airlines, 504 19 U.S. 374, 381 (1992).

20 Even if this Court did not find that irreparable injury exists on the basis of the 21 constitutional violations raised here, ample evidence exists of the irreparable harm 22 Plaintiffs will suffer from § 2(B) and A.R.S. § 13-2929. Section 2(B) puts Plaintiffs and 23 class members at risk of unlawful detention and interrogation based on little more than an 24 individual officer’s “reasonable suspicion” that they are “unlawfully present in the United 25 States.” A.R.S. § 11-1051(B). Plaintiffs will be subject to racial profiling, additional 26 police scrutiny, prolonged detention, and possible arrest if § 2(B) is implemented. See 27 Harris Decl., United States v. Arizona, No. 10-1413, ¶ 7 (Doc. 27-10); George Gascón 28

Decl. ¶¶ 18–20 (Doc. 235-6); Eduardo González Decl. ¶¶ 16–17 (Doc. 235-8); Samuel Granato Decl. ¶ 16 (Doc. 236). Indeed, the Court already found that Plaintiffs have alleged a “realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury as a result of . . . [the] operation or enforcement’ of [§ 2] because of their appearance and limited English-speaking ability.” Order, May 29, 2012, at 11 (quoting Babbitt v. United Farm Workers, 442 U.S. 289, 298 (1979)). The Court further found that “[b]ecause § 2 applies during every lawful stop, detention, or arrest, the Individual Plaintiffs will be subject to the allegedly unconstitutional immigration investigations even if they are stopped only for suspicion of a minor traffic violation and even if they have not actually committed any crime.” Id. at 8–9.

In addition, Plaintiffs, and many putative class members, will curtail their public activities if § 2(B) is allowed to take effect out of fear that they will be subject to arrest and detention by law enforcement officials due to their appearance and limited English-speaking ability. See Vargas Decl. ¶ 7 (Doc. 236-10); C.M. Decl. ¶ 5 (Doc. 331-5); Tupac Enrique Decl. ¶ 3 (Doc. 236-9). Members of plaintiff organizations will also reduce going out in public and attending organizational events out of fear that contact with law enforcement officials could lead to interrogation and detention under § 2(B). Joseph Hansen Am. Decl. ¶ 6 (Doc. 314-2); Eliseo Medina Decl. ¶ 6 (Doc. 236-9). Plaintiffs will also be fearful of having any contact with law enforcement, including reporting crimes or serving as witnesses. See Ibarra Decl. ¶ 12 (Doc. 236-2) (“SB 1070 will cause many of our clients or prospective clients to not report that they are victims of crime out of fear that contact with Arizona state law enforcement will subject them to detention, arrest and possible deportation.”); see also Medina Decl. ¶ 7 (Doc. 236-9); Gascón Decl. ¶¶ 9–10 (Doc. 235-6); Gonzalez Decl. ¶¶ 12–13 (Doc. 235-8), 18; Granato Decl. ¶¶ 9–10 (Doc. 236).

Moreover, Plaintiffs and putative class members are at risk of criminal prosecution under A.R.S. § 13-2929. The Court has already found that Plaintiff Luz Santiago “has

1 alleged a ‘realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury as a result of the . . . operation or 2 enforcement’ of A.R.S. § 13-2929.” Order, May 29, 2012, at 4. As the pastor of her 3 church, Plaintiff Santiago fears that she will face criminal sanctions because she frequently 4 provides transportation, food, and shelter to members of her congregation who may not be 5 authorized to remain in the United States. Santiago Dep. at 20-21, 24-25 (Doc. 655-11).
6 For example, Santiago has stated that she frequently drives members of her congregation 7 to church retreats and to shop for groceries. Id. at 20-21. She also provides shelter to 8 individuals in need. Id. at 24. Under A.R.S. § 13-2929, it is likely that Santiago would be 9 found to do so “in reckless disregard” of the fact that some of those congregation members 10 and individuals may be unlawfully present. Order, May 29, 2012, at 16; see also Santiago 11 Dep. at 30-31, 33. If A.R.S. § 13-2929 is not enjoined, Santiago will continue to face the 12 “reasonable likelihood” of criminal charges. See Order, May 29, 2012, at 16. Because 13 Santiago intends to continue to provide transportation and shelter to members of her 14 congregation without regard to their immigration status, see Santiago Dep. 58-59, she will 15 suffer irreparable harm if A.R.S. § 13-2929 is not enjoined. See San Diego Gun Rights
16 Comm. v. Reno, 98 F.3d 1121, 1126-27 (9th Cir. 1996); see also GLAHR, 793 F. Supp. 2d 17 at 1340 (finding that plaintiffs would suffer irreparable harm under similar harboring 18 provisions because they would be “subject to criminal penalties under laws that are 19 allegedly preempted”); Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1332 (same).

20 Organizational Plaintiffs will also suffer direct harm in the form of resource 21 diversion, the frustration of their core mission activities, and the possibility of criminal 22 prosecution of staff or volunteers under A.R.S. § 13-2929. Organizational Plaintiffs have 23 already diverted significant resources toward educating their members about the effects of 24 S.B. 1070, including A.R.S. § 13-2929. Jennifer Allen Decl. ¶ 12 (Doc. 314-1); Alison J.
25 Harrington Decl. ¶¶ 8, 23 (Doc. 314-4). A.R.S. § 13-2929 will also hinder the 26 organizational Plaintiffs’ ability to retain and recruit members because those members will 27 curtail their own travel and participation in organizational events in order to avoid being 28

1 charged with violating A.R.S. § 13-2929. Allen Decl. ¶ 13-14. This Court has already 2 found that “[t]he alleged harm to the organizational Plaintiffs will occur if S.B. 1070
 3 [including A.R.S. § 13-2929] goes into effect, regardless of how it is enforced or applied.”
 4 Order, Oct. 8, 2010, at 9.

5 In addition, Organizational Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable harm if their staff or 6 volunteers are prosecuted under A.R.S. § 13-2929. For example, staff from Plaintiff 7 Border Action Network (“BAN”) regularly bus members to events and organizational 8 functions. Allen Decl. ¶ 9. Because BAN does not inquire into the citizenship or 9 immigration status of the members it transports and some of these members are persons 10 without authorization to be in the United States, “BAN staff are concerned that this could 11 subject them to investigation under the new immigration law.” Id.; see also Pl. Ariz.
 12 South Asians for Safe Families’ Answers to Intervenor Def. Governor Brewer’s First Set 13 of Interrogs. at 6-7 (indicating that ASASF volunteers often transport citizen and non-14 citizen domestic violence victim members to medical and legal appointments) (Ex. H).
 15 Similarly, organizational Plaintiff Southside Presbyterian Church will be irreparably 16 harmed if its leaders, staff, parishioners, and volunteers are subjected to criminal 17 prosecution under A.R.S. § 13-2929 for “performing work that is central to [their] faith” 18 by providing assistance to the homeless or to immigrants in distress in the desert, or by 19 transporting parishioners and community members to activities and medical facilities.
 20 Harrington Decl. ¶¶ 9-12, 21 (Doc. 314-4).

21 III. The Balance of Equities Tips Sharply In Favor of Plaintiffs

22 Any harm to the Defendants from the grant of a preliminary injunction is minimal 23 because Plaintiffs ask only for the status quo to be maintained while the significant 24 constitutional challenges to § 2(B) are resolved. As described above, without a 25 preliminary injunction, the irreparable harms facing Plaintiffs are overwhelming, and 26 courts frequently have found that the equities favor an injunction to preserve the status quo 27 in just such a situation. See, e.g., Nat’l Ctr. for Immigrants’ Rights, Inc. v. INS, 743 F.2d 28

1365, 1368 (9th Cir. 1984) (agreeing with district court’s conclusion that irreparable harm to plaintiffs outweighed harm to government from delay in implementing regulation); AFL v. Chertoff, 552 F. Supp. 2d 999, 1006-07 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (same). Indeed the preservation of the status quo in the face of potential widespread and significant irreparable harm is precisely the purpose of a preliminary injunction. See Sierra On-Line, Inc. v. Phoenix Software, Inc., 739 F.2d 1415, 1422 (9th Cir. 1984). Plaintiffs merely seek to prevent Defendants from implementing a law that is constitutionally suspect in order to prevent broad irreparable harm to Plaintiffs and to the public. Thus, the equities tip sharply in favor of the grant of a preliminary injunction.

IV. The Preliminary Injunction Will Serve the Public Interest

The interests of Plaintiffs and the public are aligned in favor of a preliminary injunction. The same violations that would irreparably harm Plaintiffs would concurrently harm the public interest. In fact, § 2(B) is likely to result in widespread discrimination against racial and ethnic minorities, because law enforcement would be required to assess, without sufficient training and guidance, whether there is “reasonable suspicion” that an individual is unlawfully present.

The fact that law enforcement officials risk being sued by private parties, who believe that Arizona city and county officials have not enforced the law strictly enough, increases the likelihood that racial profiling will be employed. See A.R.S. § 11-1051(G); see also Villaseñor Decl. ¶¶ 4, 5, 7 (Ex. D). This provision sends a clear directive of maximum enforcement to local law enforcement officials. As a result, Plaintiffs and members of the public are at a substantial risk of being deprived of their constitutional rights to liberty and due process, with “no meaningful procedural safeguards against erroneous deprivations of liberty.” Order, Oct. 8, 2010, at 23. Given the near certainty of these irreparable harms, it is unquestionably in the public interest to prevent these widespread constitutional violations. See Murillo v. Musegades, 809 F. Supp. 487, 498 (W.D. Tex. 1992) (the “public interest will be served by protection of Plaintiffs’

1 constitutional rights” in cases where the majority of the Hispanic population within a 2 geographic area would be subjected to “illegal stops, questioning, detentions, frisks, 3 arrests, searches, and further abuses” by local law enforcement).

4 Section 2(B) will, as noted above, also deter individuals from interacting with law 5 enforcement, thus compromising public safety. González Decl. ¶¶ 12–13, 18 (Doc. 235-6 8); Granato Decl. ¶¶ 9–10 (Doc. 236); Gascón Decl. ¶¶ 9–10 (Doc. 235-6). Section 2(B) 7 will undermine trust between the police and community members, for whom a routine 8 encounter with law enforcement will become a lengthy detention. This increased fear of 9 local law enforcement in immigrant communities will threaten the safety of all Arizona 10 communities, as well as the safety of police officers.

11 Moreover, the public interest is served best when unconstitutional and preempted 12 state laws are blocked by courts. See Arizona, 641 F.3d at 366 (“[I]t is clear that it would 13 not be equitable or in the public’s interest to allow the state . . . to violate the requirements 14 of federal law In such circumstances, the interest of preserving the Supremacy 15 Clause is paramount.” (internal quotation omitted)); see also South Carolina, 2011 WL 16 6973241, at *21 (finding that a preliminary injunction of similar harboring provisions is in 17 the public interest); Alabama, 813 F. Supp. 2d at 1336 (same); Buquer, 797 F. Supp. 2d at 18 925 (“the public has a strong interest in the vindication of an individual’s constitutional 19 rights” (quoting O’Brien v. Town of Caledonia, 748 F.2d 403, 408 (7th Cir. 1984)));
 20 GLAHR, 793 F. Supp. 2d at 1340 (same). As described above, § 2(B) and A.R.S. § 13-21 2929 are preempted by federal law. For the foregoing reasons, the public interest weighs 22 in favor of a preliminary injunction.

25 The Court should grant the requested injunction.
